Maybe you, like me, rely heavily on electronic devices and screens but still like paper and print. I even use a Kindle app to read some books and periodicals, but there's something to be said for text that is printed and bound attractively and doesn't require battery life.

It's great if you use your libraries' subscription databases to get to the content of Resources for Gender and Women's Studies: A Feminist Review. But if you don't have that access, or you'd just like to hold each issue in your hands, read reviews without tiring your eyes, or doodle in the margins, here's what to do:

Copy this page. Find a pen. Fill out your mailing information below. Write a check and address an envelope; find and affix a postage stamp; and find your nearest USPS box or office. It's old-fashioned — quaint, even — but it works! We'll mail you each issue of RGWS as it's published, and you can read it wherever, whenever, and however you want. Maybe you'll even be inspired to write to us; we'd love that. Email is fine for letters (joanne.lehman@wisc.edu); or you can use pen and paper again and help keep the postal service in business.
